2. Our letter of August 1 advised [redacted] that the Soviets had recently switched from graphite to copper crucibles. [redacted] letter expressed surprise that the Soviets had delayed so long in making this switch, since US use of the copper crucible was well known. The [redacted] letter went on to say that the US military had been experimenting with titanium for some time, and asked what the USSR was doing. The letter further stated that during the war the Germans conducted titanium research at the Bitterfeld plant in East Germany and that the Russians had taken this research facility over. The letter asked for comments. Finally, the letter pointed out that [redacted] formerly engaged in titanium research at the [redacted] had [redacted]
